knowledge
to work in a global organization?

Join an online learning community of those working in the field and those interested in starting their international career as a globally-conscious leader. Develop an “international literacy,” one that moves beyond ethnocentrism and nationalism, and that recognizes and respects, even if it does not necessarily embrace, the cultures, customs and values of other nations. Participate in a program that takes a systems approach to teaching international leadership.

The program was developed with input from leaders of global operations of a variety of public, private, and nonprofit/non-governmental organizations. It is designed for those working in, or interested in working in, organizations such as embassies, NGOs, corporations doing business in the global market, government, and the military.

Program Overview

Courses in this degree program are delivered entirely online and are highly interactive. As a student, you'll have access to online learning resources and support services including the Duquesne University Library, writing center, and contact with faculty and advisors.

Format

The program can be completed in two years. The academic year is structured with three semesters per year: two 15-week terms in fall and spring and one 8-week term in summer.

Faculty

Faculty are a diverse blend of practitioners and academicians with extensive experience working in the global environment. They include instructors who have worked with NGOs, governments from a variety of countries, the United Nations, and globally conscious corporations.

At the end of this program students will be able to:

Online Master of Science in Leadership, Concentration in Global Leadership

Economic difficulties, environmental concerns, poverty and human rights – these are all issues that cut across national boundaries, affecting individuals and populations alike, all around the world. As countries around the globe become more and more interdependent, and as events in one nation produce a chain reaction with strong impacts – both positive and negative – in other countries, it becomes increasingly critical for those who work, or want to work, in the public, private, and nonprofit/non-governmental sectors to understand their responsibility for making and implementing decisions that have the global good in mind.

In this interconnected world, the need exists for leaders with a breadth of understanding of global issues and systems, and the ability to critically assess the short-term and long-term implications that their decisions and actions have on other countries. Moreover, it is important that leaders of the world learn to work together collaboratively, overcoming cultural and other differences, for the betterment of the lives of all global citizens.

With this in mind, Duquesne University's School of Leadership and Professional Advancement has developed the Master of Science in Leadership with a concentration in Global Leadership. This online graduate degree program is designed to develop globally-conscious leaders, leaders who understand the impact that their actions and decisions have upon their own regions and nations as well as upon other nations around the world.
