Are you ready for something more?

Duquesne University
Pittsburgh, Pa.
How do you spot a Duquesne student? They’re the ones studying hard, obviously.

But it’s more than that. They’re thinking critically and sharpening their minds on real-world challenges. Nurturing the sense of right and wrong. And leading lives with honesty and integrity.

These are the hallmarks of a Duquesne education, and they lay the intellectual and ethical foundation students need to succeed and grow as individuals throughout life.

Students can build on this education by working closely with professors, being a part of research with real-world impact, and doing internships to help launch careers after college. At Duquesne, you’ll get the chance to do more as a student than you ever thought possible.

Because the real value of a Duquesne education is how well it prepares you to grow throughout a lifetime of success.
DUQUESNE 101
What are the most important things to know?

There’s so much going on at Duquesne that we could never cover it all in a brochure. But here are some quick facts that should help paint a picture as you imagine what you want your college years to look like.

It means thinking big in every small moment.
Being willing to take smart risks.
Being open to all ideas and all people.
Doing the right thing, even when no one’s watching.
Doing more for others and for the world.
And it’ll make a lot more sense once you get here.

We even have our own word:
“Duquesneable”
It means thinking big in every small moment.
Being willing to take smart risks.
Being open to all ideas and all people.
Doing the right thing, even when no one’s watching.
Doing more for others and for the world.
And it’ll make a lot more sense once you get here.

My Duquesne education took me to Pope Francis’ papal visit in Philadelphia, where I had full press credentials and worked with three other students to take hundreds of hours of footage. I edited the video—along with 30 interviews and thousands of photos—into a documentary that was screened on campus with Pittsburgh’s Bishop Zubik in attendance. It was a great real-world experience and the opportunity of a lifetime!

One of the things I love about Duquesne is the size. It’s not too overwhelming, and it’s not too small. It’s just right, so you’re able to build long-lasting friendships. And because Duquesne is just the right size, you’re really able to have a relationship with your professors. They’re world-class professors who have worked in military, in government, anywhere you can imagine. These are life-long connections that are really beneficial. It goes a long way.
